Second Story Press

I am nine years old and I am a little kid, but I am BIG in size.

How can you be small and big
at the same time?

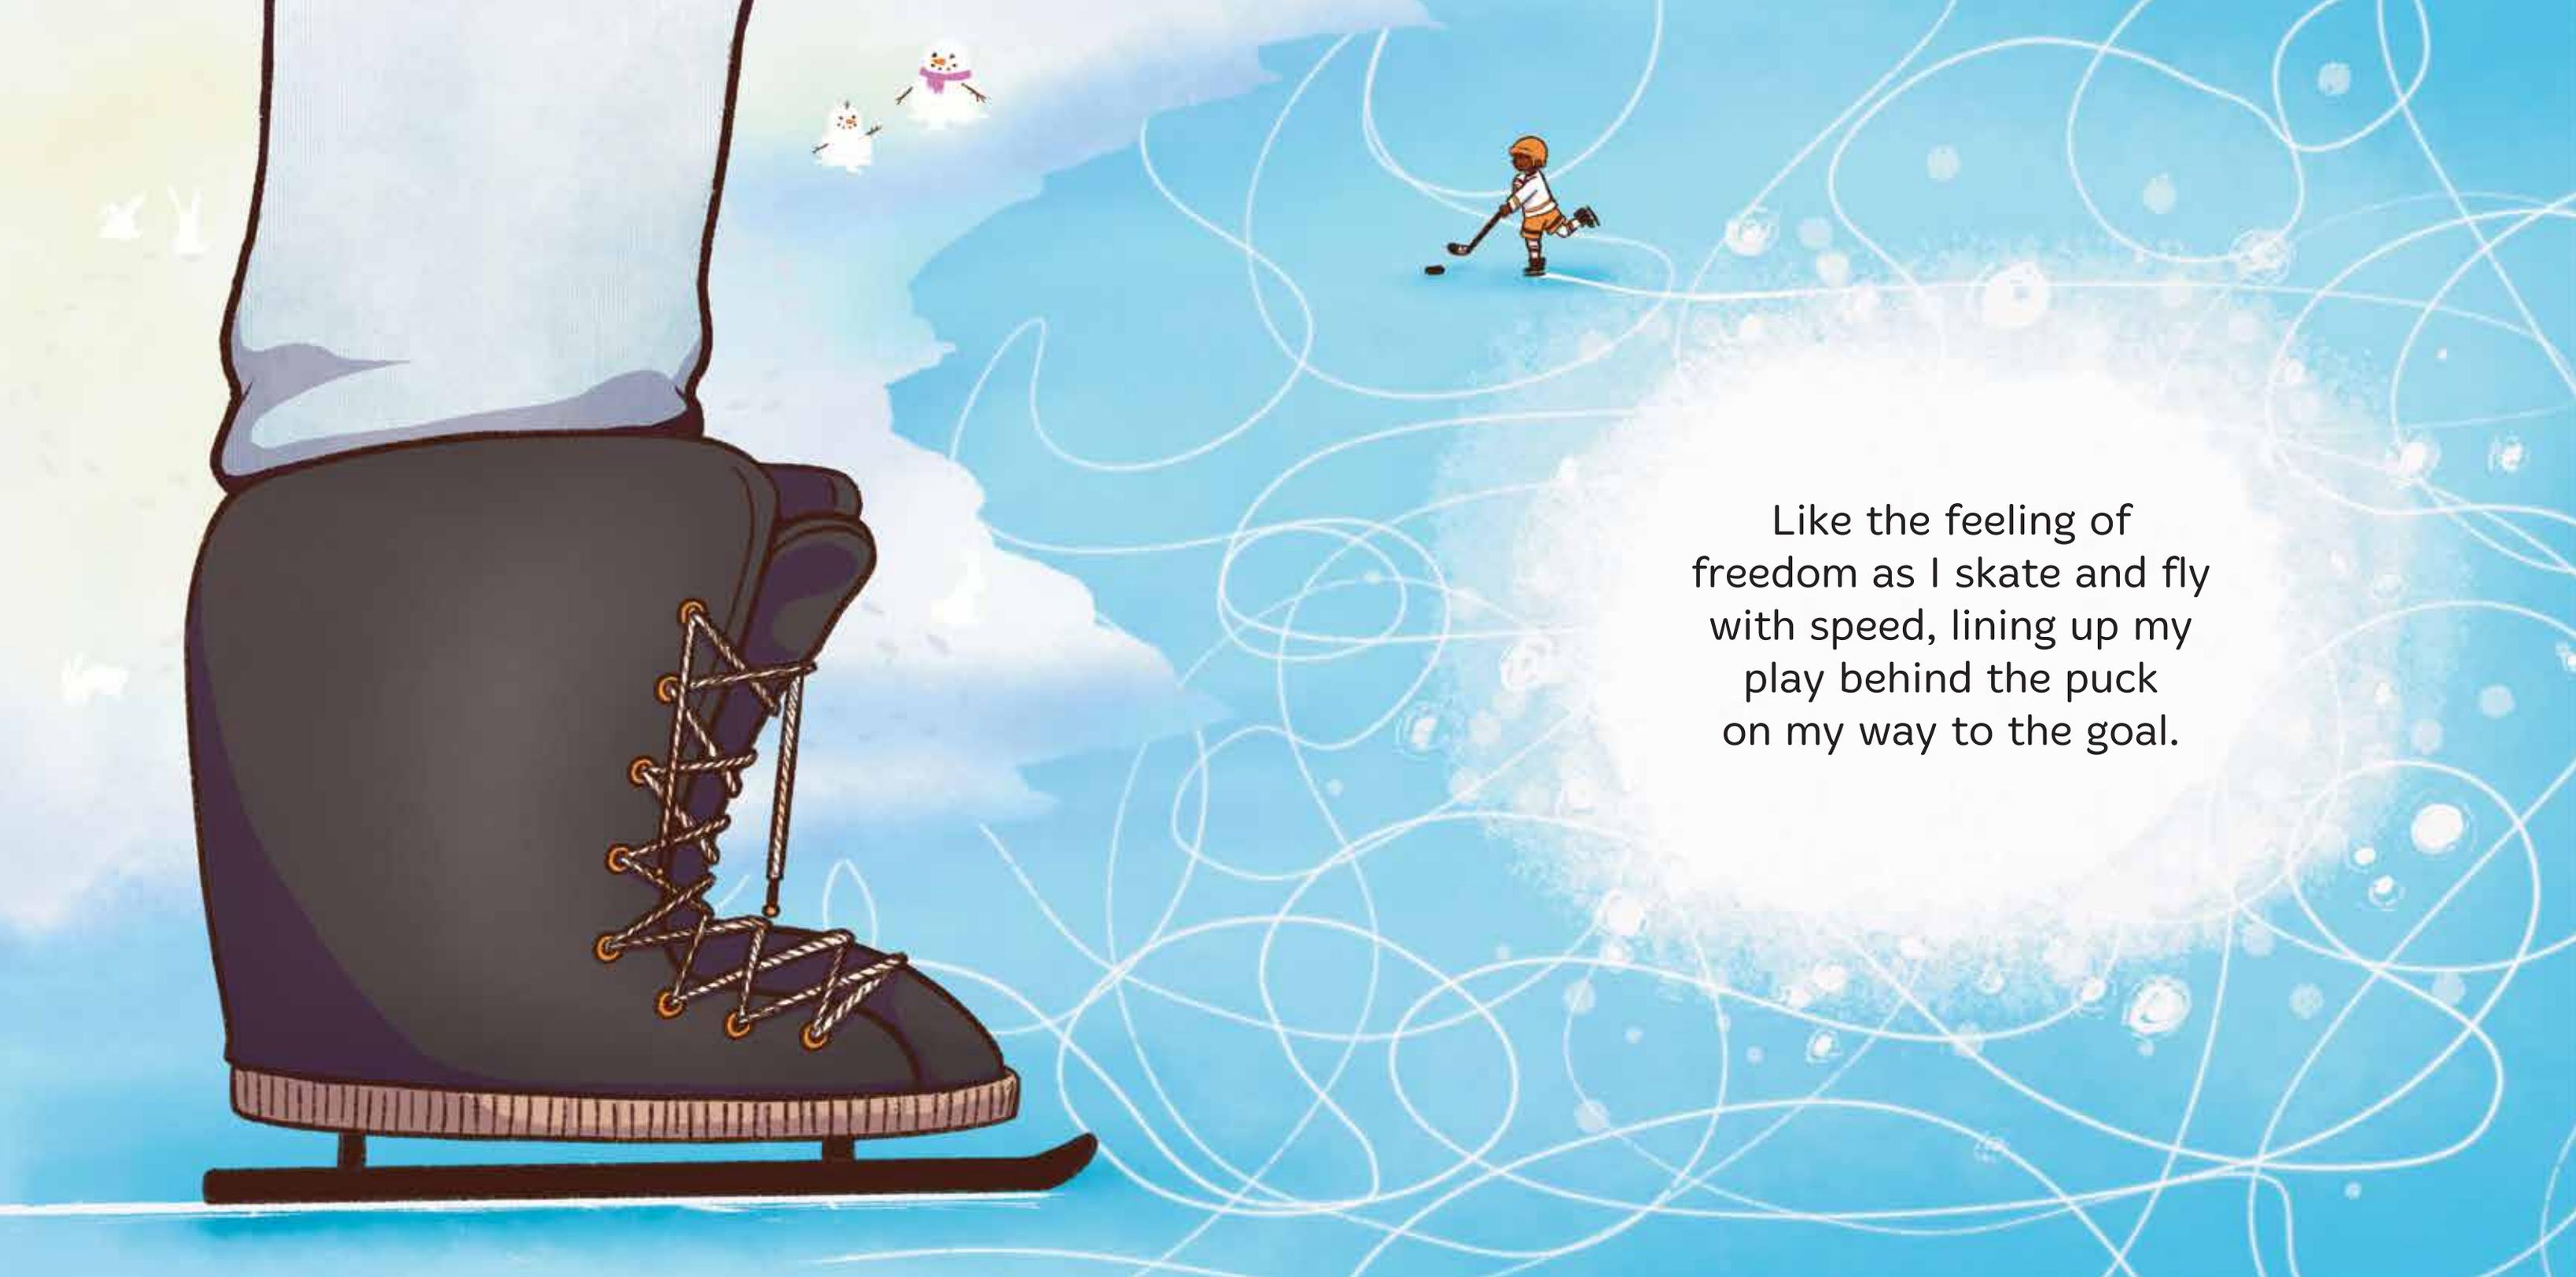

What do you see,
when you see me?

Small and big
or big and small?

My mother says I am mighty. That's big.

My father says I am strong,
and an awesome big feeling comes over me.

An artistic illustration from the perspective of a hockey player. In the foreground, the back of a dark blue hockey skate with gold laces is visible. The background is a bright blue sky filled with white, swirling lines and snowflakes. In the distance, a small hockey player in an orange and white uniform is skating on the ice, holding a stick. Two snow globes are floating in the sky above the player.

Like the feeling of freedom as I skate and fly with speed, lining up my play behind the puck
on my way to the goal.

But, but big can also be BAD
for a boy.
A big boy.

And dangerous too,
for a big Black boy.

“Hey you!
Don’t crush
my son.”

“Look at his size, he’s dangerous.”

“Coach, remove that bully!”

I skate and I deke,
avoiding the boards
and the hits.

And I shout
“P.K. Subban!

Joel Ward!”

How did you make big cool?

Hey you! People in the arena!
What do you see?

Do you really see me?
Small and big. Big and small.
Big Black boy.

The rink is ice, ice is water, water is oceans, and oceans are really big!

The ice washes away all the small thinking in the arena.

And in that moment, I am a little drop of water.

Moving to a ripple, about to be a wave when I land the goal.

A player skates
across my path.
He is bigger,
but everyone is quiet.

I have seen him
before.
I have seen his play.
I know his game.

What happens when big meets
bigger?
Everyone stays
quiet.

Never once taking my eyes off the target.
I look to the goal.
Time to score.

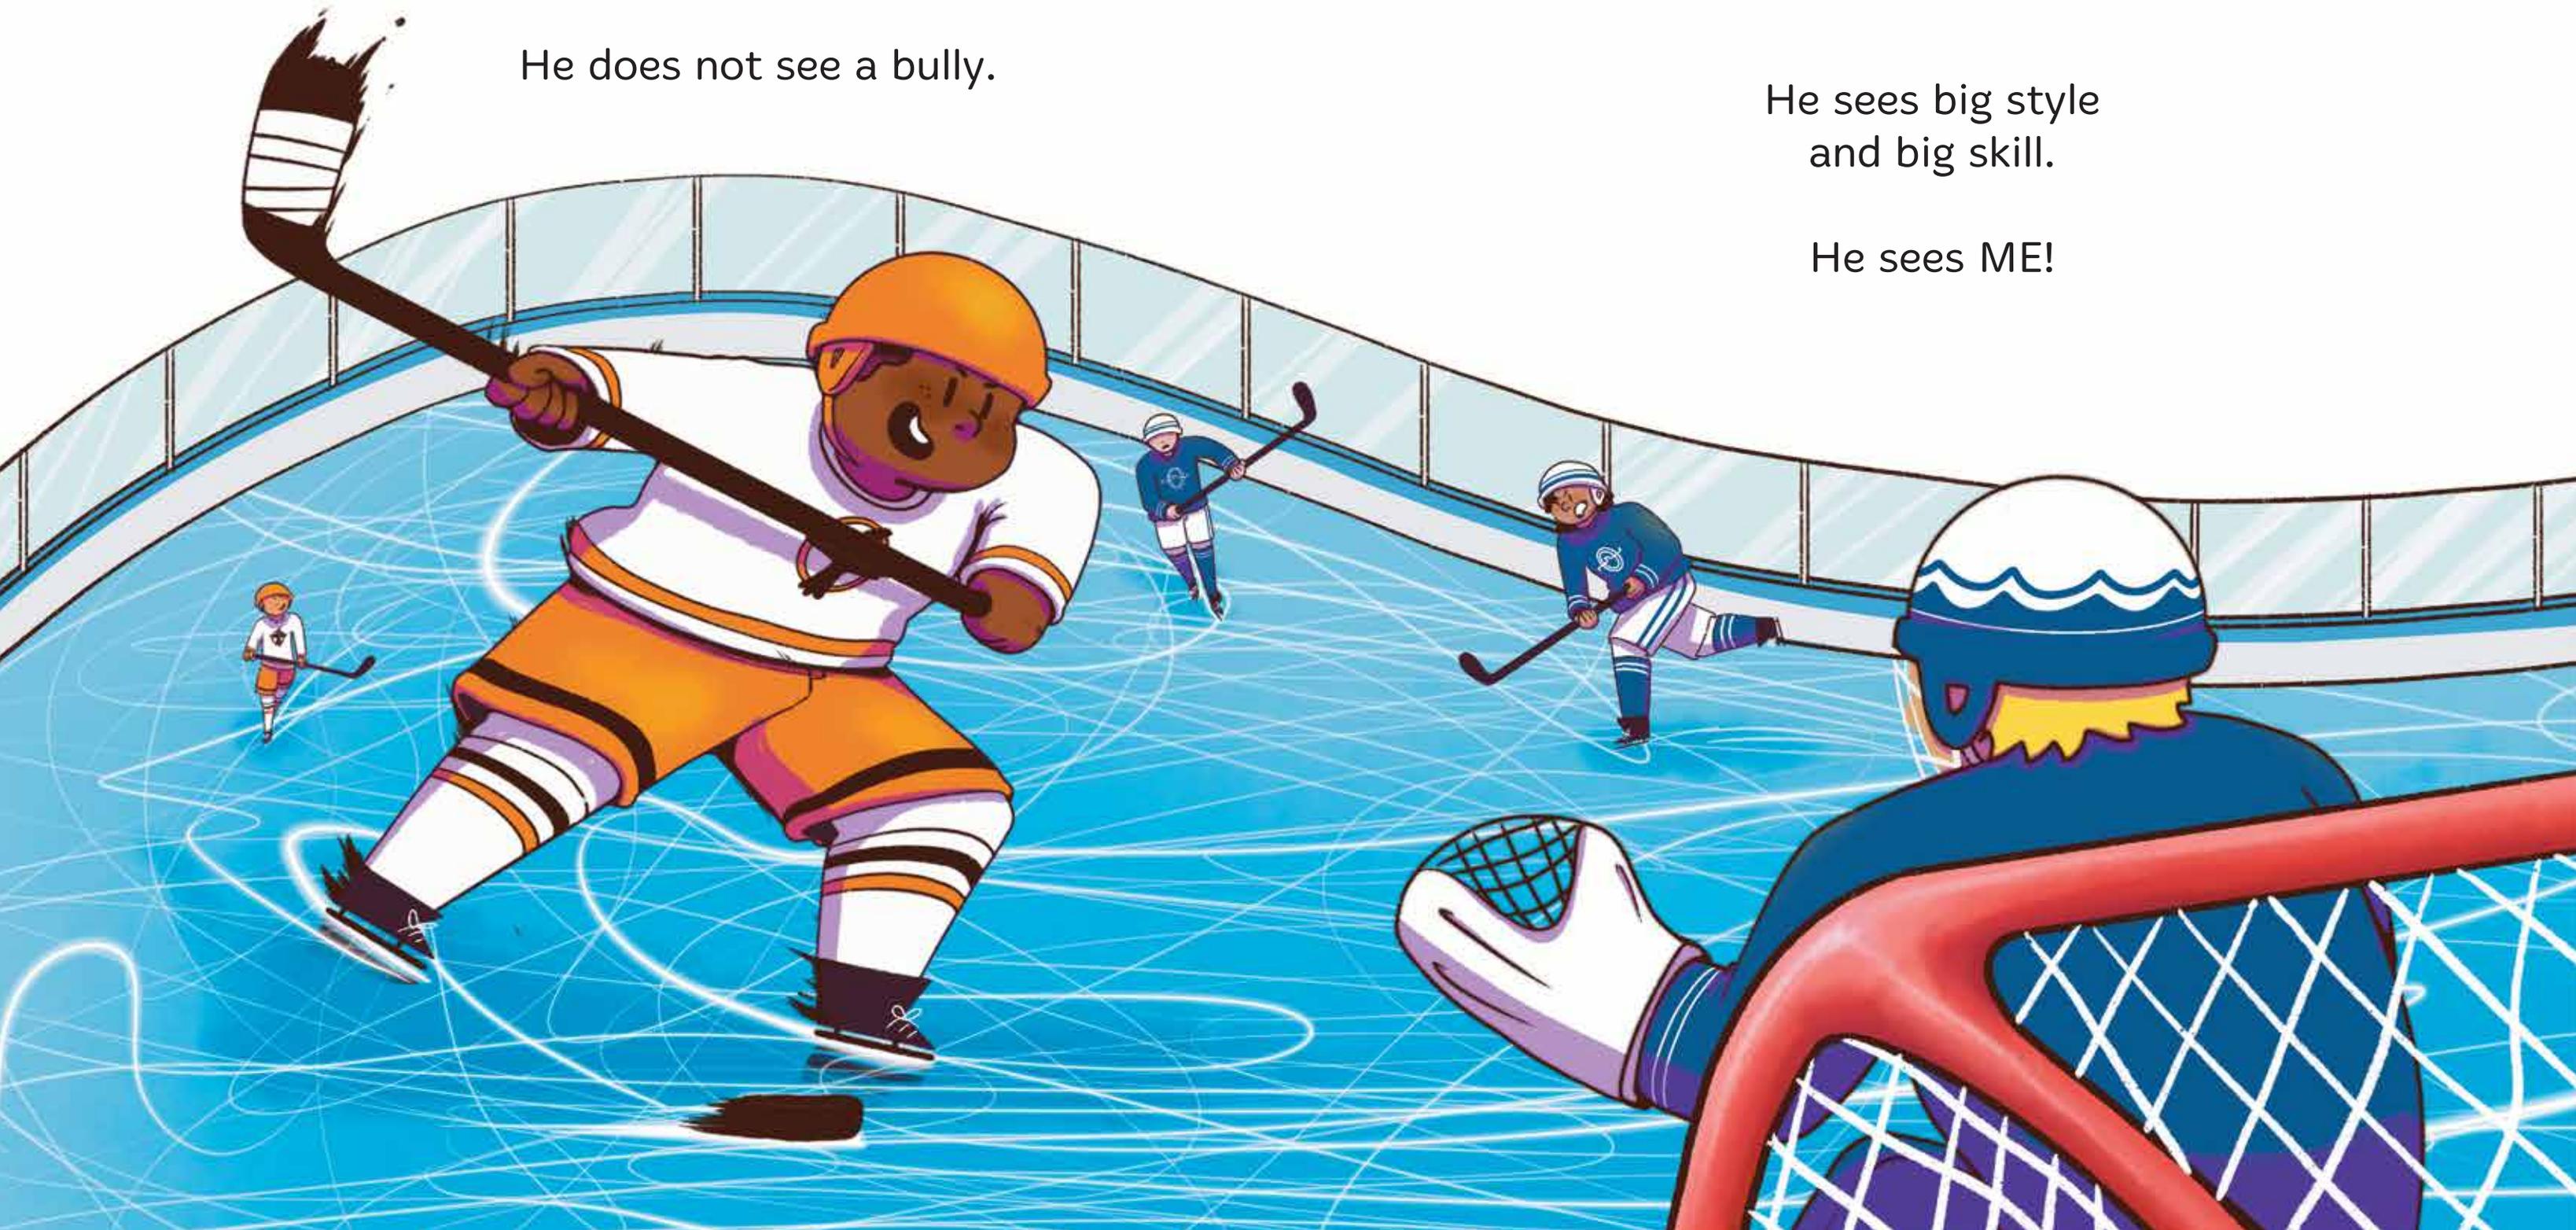

I skate with grace
straight at the goalie.
His eyes are clear.

He does not see a bully.

He sees big style
and big skill.

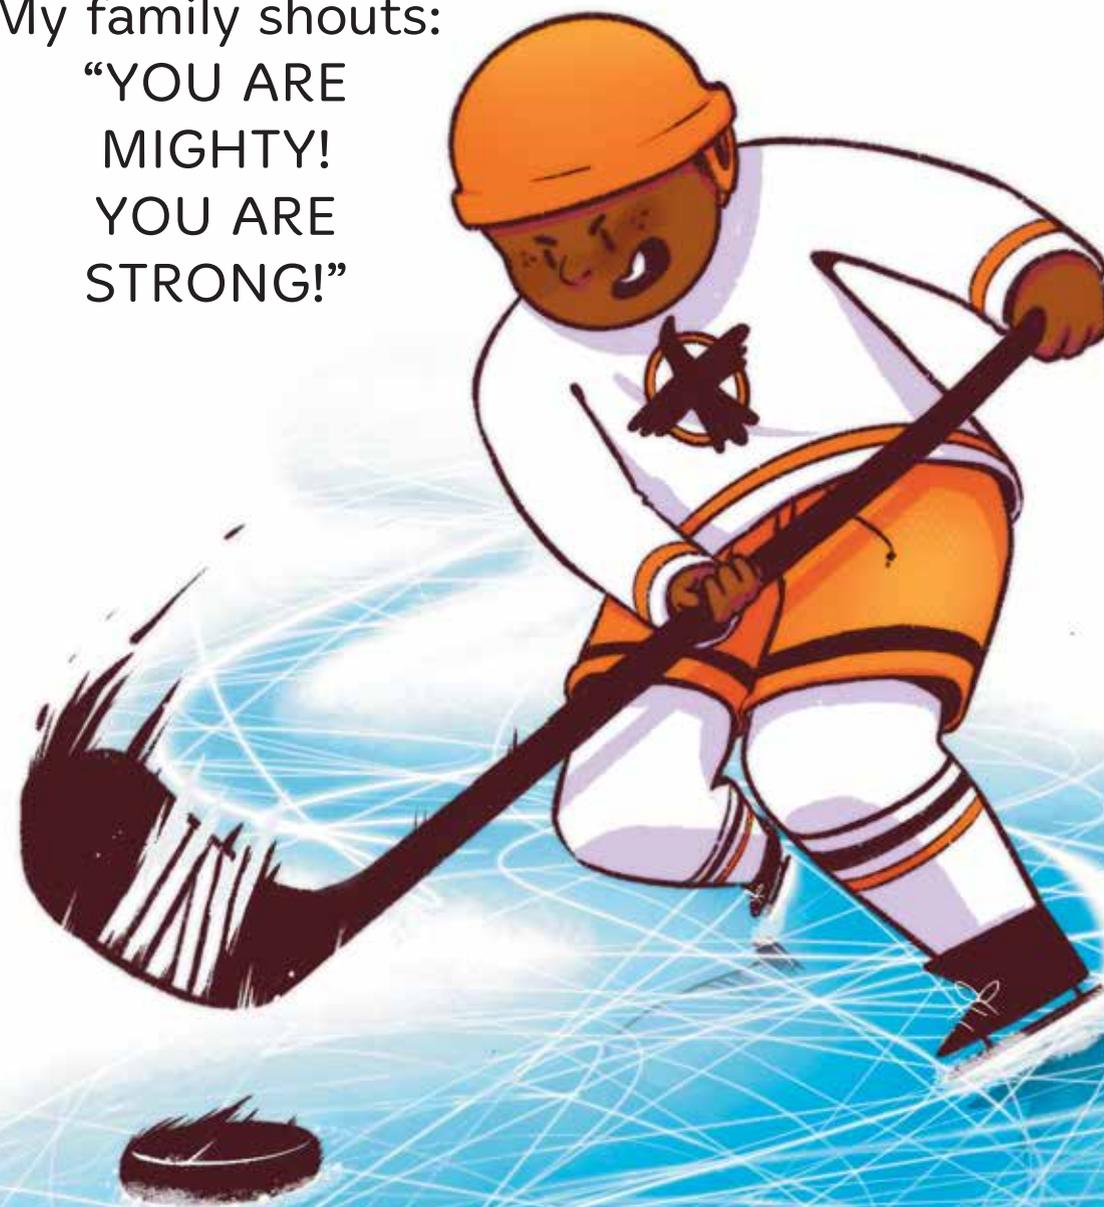

He sees ME!

I hear Coach yell,
"YOU ARE THE BIG IDEA!"

My family shouts:
"YOU ARE MIGHTY!
YOU ARE STRONG!"

Their voices grow louder.
They fill me up.
I feel unstoppable.
I am in a dance with the goalie,
never once letting my eyes waver.

Like Willie O'Ree
who came before me.

“YOU GOT THIS!”
my sister shouts.

“GO FOR IT!”
screams my brother.
And I sink the puck
into the net.

“SCORE!” my family shouts.
“GOAL!” my team cheers.

The arena erupts and in that moment I feel truly beautiful.

I AM BIG AND BLACK!

Hey you! People in the arena!
What do you see?
Do you really see me?

In the middle of the ice, a young Black hockey player finds joy in his talent and confidence in the cheers of his family, his coach, and the other players. Their support gives him the power to face down those who see him as a threat and to focus on the thrill of the game.

A celebration of size and Blackness and the magic of sport.
