Like blossoms kissing your eyes in sunlight, a soft breeze misting your cheeks with dew,

like snowdrops bowing their heads to no one, that's how pure my love is.

Like a baby bird nesting in the cup of my hand, a newborn fawn in the moss-cloaked trees, the shadow of a buttercup, the sigh of a moth, that's how tender my love is.

A vibrant illustration of a garden scene. In the top left, there are clusters of dark purple blackberries. Below them, several yellow daisies with bright orange centers are in bloom. Two bees, with yellow and black stripes and translucent wings, are shown in flight around the flowers. One bee is positioned near the center-left, and another is further to the right. The background is a soft, light blue sky. In the bottom left, there are large green leaves and a branch with small red berries. In the bottom right, more green leaves and a red, feathery plant are visible.

Like blackberries,
big as your thumbs, and juicy, and honey from bees
who go bizz-buzz-whizz, the smell of yellow roses,

the taste of cold plums, that's how sweet my love is.

Like a mother bear cuddling her cubs in her den, or a red fox hunting for apples to feed his kits, the crack-boom-bam of a rambunctious thunderstorm, that's how fierce my love is.

Like mountains heaving under drifts of snow and waves of bold horses with white-foam hooves, like a breath that blows wild winds across the sky, that's how strong my love is.

If you count the stars
on a night clear anew, that's how endless my love is for you.
